

Park Street Collective

Hugh Altschwager founded Inkster in 2013; we loved his hand-turned limestone light fittings, so unlike anything we had seen before. Their latest project is something they have been wanting to do for ages: to design a whole space and everything in it (except the chairs). The new Inkster Melbourne HQ was created in partnership with HIP V.HYPE; each element represents new work. They made lots of the things themselves, but also worked with local manufacturers to develop their designs. The large sliding doors were designed and built by Binq for high thermal performance. Inkster have invited eight other self-employed creatives to share the space. Must be a nice place to work!
inksterprojects.com
hipvhype.com
binq.com.au

